Section 11-4 in NTNU's PhD Regulations: Work that may not be submitted

Work or parts of a work approved as a basis for previous examinations or degrees may not be submitted for evaluation. However, data, analyses and methodologies from previous degrees may be used as the basis for work on the PhD project. Pieces of work that have already been published or publicly presented prior to commencing the PhD will not be approved if more than five (5) years have passed from the date that they were first made public to the start of the PhD agreement. The Faculty may grant exemptions from this requirement if this is warranted by special circumstances; see Section 11-2.

The thesis or the artistic doctoral work may be submitted for evaluation to only one educational institution; see sections 13-2 and 13-3.

The Faculty's supplementary guidelines

An article or manuscript prepared in collaboration with other PhD candidates may be included as part of two or more doctoral theses, as long as the individual candidate's contribution is of a considerable degree and is clearly identifiable. The joint work and individual contributions must be accounted for at the submission of all the theses involved.
