Other Voices, Other Stories: The Ocean nourishes and sustains not only human life, but all life on Earth. We have devised innumerable practices that treat the ocean as a resource. But what can we do to nourish and sustain the ocean in return? How have human societies constructed and represented their relationship to the ocean through the stories we tell about it? How do ocean narratives help us to understand the relationship between our ocean stories and the environmental challenges we now face: climate change, pollution, extinctions, sea level rise, environmental justice, food insecurity, and more? How do the humanities provide new approaches to interpretations, representations, imagination and new understandings of ocean narratives?

This session is organized by HAVANSVAR Humanities Ocean Initiative – an NTNU Oceans Pilot on Ethical, Social and Cultural aspects of Ocean Research and Innovation. HAVANSVAR is a research programme addressing ethical, cultural, communicative, narrative and historic dimensions of the ocean.
